University of Winnipeg President & Former Canadian Foreign Affairs Minister to Address Tsinghua University

BEIJING – Dr. Lloyd Axworthy, President of The University of Winnipeg and former Canadian Foreign Affairs Minister, will address faculty and students at 15:15 on Thursday, November 24, 2005 at Tsinghua University on “Human Security in the Global Era.”

Axworthy, nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize for his part in the Ottawa Convention banning anti-personnel landmines, will talk with Tsinghua University faculty and students about the most pressing issues affecting human security today: infectious disease, climate change, poverty, and conflict.

The world is increasingly defined by what we share, not by what divides us. Information Technology has unified the world, so that increasingly it is not access to natural resources that defines power and wealth, but rather access to information. The borderless nature of threats to human security requires international thinking. Issues of climate change, SARS, nuclear arms proliferation, and of an increasingly sophisticated underworld, are global threats that require broader awareness and international cooperation.

“Universities have a tangible role to play in helping to develop the type of global mindedness necessary to navigate this new interconnected world. It is our responsibility to equip today’s generation to deal with current and future threats to human security,” said Axworthy, “An international approach to education is the only way forward. As educators and as global citizens, we have a duty to create and prepare young people for today’s world and tomorrow’s challenges.”

Dr. Axworthy will draw from his experience as Canada’s Minister of Foreign Affairs where he brought to the world stage the Canadian-led concept of The Responsibility to Protect (R2P), a phrase that describes an evolving concept about the duties of all governments to provide human security for the people of the world, wherever they live.

While in Beijing, Dr. Axworthy will meet with Acting Canadian Ambassador to China Phil Calvert, members of the Institute of Foreign Affairs, State Administration of Foreign Experts Affairs (SAFEA), and a number of Beijing university presidents. He will also speak with high school students at the Yang Guang Qing School. Dr. Axworthy’s trip also included visits to Hong Kong and Xi’an.
